This game is really nice and my children love it, especially youngest. It's relaxing and fun. While game is in active development new patches are coming from developer regularly, bugs are fixed, new features introduced and that is very good. I've been playing this game on mobile before and it looks really good over there too.

Music is fun, but repetitive although in the newest update now you can choose what to listen. I'm sure more and more tracks will be introduced, and may be ability to "randomize" playlist.

As the game is in early access, so reviews like mine are not good representation of the current status of the game as more and more bugs are eliminated, reviews are outdated quickly, that why I'd recommend this game but not white about bugs :D. Not worthy of 6.99.. As a bit of an airship enthusiast I was really impressed with Hindenburg VR experience. The author got every little detail right, including the front and back control center, pathways inside the airship, engine rooms, smoking room, restaurant, A and B passenger rooms and even illustrations on the walls! I visited a Zeppelin Museum in Friedrichshafen, but here I actually learned more details about the Hindenburg internals.

People who are dissapointed with this VR app are probably so because this is not a real game. It is a VR experience, and after you visit every place in the airship and play with scenarios (Hindenburg disaster and RC Hindenburg) there is not much else to do. It took me below two hours to finish everything. Still, I am interested in the topic, so it was good use of my money..

Take on match-3 gameplay that builds levels from any music track thrown at it. At the core this sounds like a good idea, but even based on the provide tracks the levels are woefully short and don't produce an experience all that compelling across multiple game modes. The ability to generate levels based on audio tracks to produce infinite levels falls short if none of them are interesting to play.. The music is good, the company, not so much.

All about that game screaming "We are love monkey series!". Especially the third (The Curse of Monkey Island). Graphics and stylistics, music and selection menu, separation on chapters - not just resembling, it's direct copy (Especially last part of game). But plot is different and voice acting is perfect. The weakest part of the game is the graphics and animation, it's often very pathetic and crummy. But if the secondary does not scare you (or you don't play third monkey game) - it's worth. Highly recommend.. Very good little game, not too scary. a perfect way to introduce people to VR horror.. The poison gun is pretty great, the rifle would be 100x better if it only fired in single shot, 3 round burst is nothing more than a waste of ammo. Despite the typos, it's a tidy little turn-based mech game. Battles are short and sweet, you must balance three types of resources as well as research, production and crew training, and there are enough colour schemes to allow you to deploy the most garish mech squad you can think of. Short and predictable story, but still worth a spin.. The game is rather frustrating since it does not explain its mechanics. This would be fine, if this was intended as a casual time-wasting clicker. And the game does give this impression. However, one of the three tutorial levels is on achieving a high-score. Apparently, the devs intended the game to have a strategy element. Also fine. But, please, do explain the whole mechanics! At the start of each level a number of stats are given for the bacteria. What do they mean? How is the strength of the bacteria each turn determined? And what is it important for? Questions, over questions, over questions.

And what is with the 5 turns limit per level? Give unlimited turns and award stars for finishing withing certain amount of turns, if you like that. Or introduce difficulty levels that control the amount of turns available. And giving stars just for score? Honestly, I do not understand why the others so much like this game. It is a strategic nightmare.

Well, maybe I approached the game with the wrong expectations.. ing god dammit thumbtack. This is an arcade game. Audio is in Chinese. Vive controllers do not really work and I have to use an Xbox controller or keyboard and mouse. There are 3 views; above and behind the tank, riding on the tank and inside the tank. The inside tank view is pretty cool but there is no VR function and you aim using a monitor. You start the game with a T55 and having played about 1 hour, I am still using the T55. Single player gameplay is pretty much, drive to the green arrow. Once you get to the green arrow, enemy tanks and later, helicopters appear. Destroy these and move on to the next green arrow and new enemies. This is not a very advanced game, but I do enjoy it. I am looking forward to some in depth tank simulations in VR, but this one is very simple, but fun.
